Hey guys!
I wanna say I've noticed some people leaving the forums because its stressful. And by gosh, it probably is!

I support them, but i also want to say that sometimes this is our home. We can't wait for our problems to fix themselves.

Sometimes, we have to stand up, get involved, get hurt, but reap so much live and community it will change our lives for the better!

Born in the Wild
Formed in the Fire
Built for the Battle

This has been my slogan for my life and though this might be a rough time, hey, it's worth it. We just have to Run Wild, Live Free, Love strong....together.

So i am going to stay, even though i am in the middle of an evacuation because i have people i love here, and people who are my friends. My family.

So I will stand Unafraid and Willing to fight for my home by Running Wild, Living free (of grudges and in forgiveness even though it is hard. And I'm not an easily forgiving person) and Loving strong.

So right now, i say to Malestrom, i forgive you and I'm ready! grin ready to rebuild the forums.

WHOSE WITH ME!!!

We don't really need to rebuild anything. Everyone's kind of moved on, at least what I can tell. Maelstrom/Hurricane hasn't posted in days, so she's either banned or laying low, either of which I'm totally fine with. I'm also not in a forgiving mood.

Then again I'm pessimistic and cynical so take that as you will well you can be a cynic with me honestly standing and fighting is great and all but you need to understand that some of us want to move on sure we've all had our share of memories on the forums, and i've had mine too but at some point you're here for the forums anymore- it's just the memory of it

we all have to grow up some day

also because high school is extremely time consuming and stressful

@Corey Well, hmm... we have drama all over the place, a tiny bit of excessive shipping, little talk of the book series that this message board is dedicated to, excessive RPs, more forumers leaving, little creativity(Quartz was right)... I'll get back if I can think of more. But whatever the case, we need to fix these problems.

It's been a while, but I'm certain at least a few people will remember me.

Haha, this post is so positive, I love it.

It also outright ignores certain issues.

I know I haven't been here recently, but I've read some posts, and they've...really disturbed me. A lot of these seem morally questionable.

The people on here are what makes this place "home", what makes this place worth coming back to. The people on here and the things they say appear to have changed drastically in the amount of time I've been gone, and I can't really call this place a "home" anymore. Maybe the forums are burning, but there are people on here adding to the fire, so really the best way to stop it is to get rid of those people, which, of course, only the mods can do.

Maelstrom? I wasn't here for the whole Hurricane-is-dead-actually-she's-not shebang. I will admit I never liked Hurricane, as I only had a few encounters of her, none of which were very positive, and she practically advertised that she had certain problems to me. I don't know about you, but it is NOT okay to lie about people being dead. I did read that post she made. I understand how hard it is to stand up to parental pressures. I understand that we're human and we all make mistakes. I am willing to forgive her. Am I willing to say "oh, it's okay, let's just forget about it and move on, right?"

No. Because it was not okay.

While I personally didn't cry when I heard she was dead, a lot of forumers did, and I understand that. I understand that they're still angry that they were tricked into grieving, and I understand that they are not willing to forgive Maelstrom.

I don't really think this place can be fixed. I've been on the forums for two years. They've changed. I'm not happy with what they've turned out to be — to be honest, the moment I looked back here recently, I was scared. The new forumers are either morally questionable or incredibly naive, and I hope nobody gets hurt. I'm not going to come back here for a long time, and I will absolutely not blame anyone else for leaving — maybe they should.
